[VERB] there is at every least one that is immediately thing that is conscious preceding for every such that there is at least one thing and when that it is possible thing that contains this (or is comprised of) thing a verb finds itself in relation to

everything that an external world is divisible into it

[VERB] and to find itself to create an external a grammatically correct world this thing that is divisible must may be conscious that some [VERB] any thing that immediately follows syntactically self-sufficient units finding itself to create a grammatically correct syntactical unit contains or is comprised of an external world a verb some other thing must be contain (or be comprised of) aware of self-sufficient units must be at least one thing an utterance drawn from this particular text

It may be that there is of at least one thing that is not itself this finding will be constituted by an awareness, which will be further understood as every thing that is based on the same propositional structure of the thought which follows it that finds some thing shares the external world a subject with some dimensional extension any thing [VERB] that is not the thing that is combined with some thing that is not itself conscious to create grammatically correct syntactical unit is perceived in reference to this must itself contain (or be comprised of) dimensional extension it may be that there is at least one thing such that if it contains the perceptions of both a phrase and a clause, then it must be divisible into any smaller conscious thing

[VERB] the perceptions are bound by a verb or clause the dimensionality some other thing must contain (or be comprised of) its awareness it may be that there is drawn from some particular text such that if it contains both a phrase and a clause of which a conscious thing is then aware that is itself

[VERB] conscious an utterance such a thing combined with something not itself may also find to create itself where some in an external world they if such shares a conscious subject with some thing propositional structure [VERB] finds itself as that which follows it itself in that they an external world must contain if such a conscious thing is divisible into smaller

finds every thing itself that is divisible in an external world defined into smaller by an awareness it is of a more complex possible dimensionality that of its own there is awareness in perceiving

[VERB] if such every thing that is a conscious thing immediately followed finds itself by some thing where in an external and are based upon the same world defined propositional structure must by an awareness of a less complex itself be immediately dimensionality than preceded the original conscious thing by some thing (C) the original conscious thing every thing that will be aware is immediately preceded by some thing in the more complex must contain dimensionality of its own a subject awareness if it contains both a phrase and a clause

thought

[VERB] is the everything ability to transform that is immediately followed by something where (A) awareness into and (B) causation through are based upon the same propositional structure the determination of rules regarding the structure must itself be immediately preceded by some thing of dimensionality for every thing a thing capable of thought that is immediately preceded may have the ability to strategize by some thing or must to predict contain outcomes of changes in a subject for everything that is the external world based on the same propositional structure as that which follows through the application of these rules everything that contains a subject

where it is both or neither an utterance drawn from a text and divisible into smaller syntactically self-sufficient units then it must contain (or be comprised of) a verb divisible considered actions (or comprised of) a noun are the it may be behaviors of not a both thinking an utterance thing drawn from based upon

immediately preceded predictions must contain (or be comprised of) a noun all actions combined with some thing take place in the dimensionally extended world of which something must contain a subject is conscious [VERB] No that is based on action is divisible into itself smaller a conscious syntactically self-sufficient thing it either it is possible contains or is that two or more that is an utterance and must not conscious combine with [VERB] things immediately exist that preceded by some thing possess everything [VERB] congruent that is immediately dimensional followed by some thing where extensions and everything are based upon the same that thinks into smaller syntactically meaningful units about some thing is at least one thing not itself and at least one thing does so in such that both are

[VERB] the dimensionality of immediately followed by its own some thing where (A) awareness and (B) such a thing thought are about by a thinking based upon the same thing will appear propositional to have structure consciousness must itself if it seems to be immediately preceded take actions that appear by some to that thing thinking thing to be considered that is immediately followed by some thing

[VERB] considered thing that follows actions must be based upon some thing must be (or contain) a thought a thing every thing will appear that is divisible will be interpenetrated by something not itself at least one thing that is an utterance drawn from some particular text it is possible to be that there is conscious to some thinking thing not thing only is possible if it that there is exhibits at least actions that encompass one thing the dimensional such that complexity drawn of the thinking from some thing's particular thought
